Engaging the Civil War, a series founded by the editors of the Emerging Civil War blog group, adopts the sensibility and accessibility of public history while adhering to the standards of academic scholarship. To engage readers and bring them to a new understanding of America’s great story, series authors draw on insights they gained while working with the public—walking the ground where history happened at battlefields and historic sites, talking with visitors in museums, and educating students in classrooms. With fresh perspectives, field-tested ideas, and in-depth research, volumes in the series connect readers with the story of the Civil War in ways that make history meaningful to them while underscoring the continued relevance of the war, its causes, and its effects. All Americans can claim the Civil War as part of their history. This series helps them engage with it.

For more information, please contact emergingcivilwar@gmail.com or sylvia@sylverlining.com

Board of Advisers
James J. Broomall, Shepherd University
Derek Maxfield, Genesee Community College (NY)
Kelly D. Mezurek, Walsh University
Julie Mujic, Sacred Heart University
Terrianne Schulte, D’Youville College
Matthew E. Stanley, Albany State University (GA)
Kristopher D. White, Civil War Trust

Submission guidelines available at https://emergingcivilwar.com/submission-guidelines

Coming Soon!

Turning Points of the American Civil War
Edited by Chris Mackowski and Kristopher D. White, with a foreword by Thomas A. Desjardin

Donald C. Pfanz