

CONTENTS

List of Illustrations and Table ix

Preface xi

Acknowledgments xix

Introduction: High Schools, Higher Learning, and Our Histories 1

 Inventing the High School 7

 Disciplinary Boundaries and Beginnings 11

 Why Louisville? 14

Part One. Establishing the First “Higher Schools” in Louisville

1. The Idea(l) of the High School 27

 Public and Private Goods 29

 Growing Out of and Serving the Common Schools 33

 Establishing the High Schools 38

2. A Polished, Practical, or Profound Education: Collegiate Curricula
in the First Ten Years 45

 Rhetoric and Writing at Male High School 47

 Rhetoric and Writing at Female High School 58

3. Practical Rhetoric and Progressive Pedagogies in the High Schools 73

 The New Education and William N. Hailmann 80

 Circulating the New Education 84

 Beyond Treatises and Speeches 88

 The Ambiguous Legacy of the New Education 92

Interchapter: The Civil War Years 94

Part Two. Higher Learning in Transformation

4. The “Absurd Effort”: The University Idea and the Changing High School 101
 A “University of Public Schools” 104
 Changing the High Schools, Changing Writing Instruction 107
 Women’s Higher Schooling 119
 Composition across the Public Schools 125
5. “Just on the Border of the Intellectual World”: Central Colored High School 128
 Legislating Learning 133
 The “A” Grade 137
 High School Beginnings, Again 142
 “Incapable of Teaching High-School Classes” 148
6. Inventing the High School, Inventing Composition 154
 “They Have Tightened the Screws on the Secondary Schools” 162
 Composing First-Year Writing in the College 166
- Conclusion: Blurring the Boundaries 170
 Dual Enrollment 172
 Translanguaging Higher Learning 175
 What College-Level Writers Do 178
 A History for the Present 181

Notes 187

Bibliography 215

Index 237

ILLUSTRATIONS AND TABLE

- 1.1. Male High School building 39
- 2.1. Freshman examination questions in rhetoric and composition at Male High School 52
- Table. Comparison of Male High School and Kentucky University, 1865–66 110
- 4.1. Course requirements for Male High School and University of Public Schools 116
- 4.2. Female High School building 120
- 4.3. Graded course of instruction for Female High School 122
- 5.1. Central Colored High School building 137
- 5.2. Course of study for “A” grade of Central Colored School 140
- 5.3. Principal J. M. Maxwell, Central Colored School 148
- 6.1. Enrollment and graduation trends for Louisville High Schools, 1857–95 156